A Sane Program

A bewildering mass of suggestions, charges, and counter charges have come out of the prospect of a tax-raising special session of the Kentucky general assembly. The average taxpayer listens first to one side and then to the other. He is more or less at a loss to know what course he should advocate, because he does not have the full information on the complicated financial problems of the state before him.

His elected representatives have, however, and he looks to the most able and honorable among them to solve the problem.

Several able conceived solutions for providing the necessary revenue and balancing the budget in a manner least harmful to all have been made. One of the most reasonable we have seen recently comes from Senator James Breathitt Jr. of Christian county, former lieutenant governor, who was prominently mentioned as gubernatorial timber in 1931.

Senator Breathitt's plan involves three simple steps:

First, he would curtail state governmental expenses. Everyone who has studied the situation and is not moved by personal or partisan political motives agrees that a vast curtailment is possible, without injury to governmental efficiency.

Second, he would repeal the Gaines real estate tax reduction act passed in March, 1931. This cut the tax for state purposes to five cents on all real estate. It now costs the state about that much to collect so it might be said that real estate is yielding nothing. Instead of a homestead tax exemption which would have relieved the small taxpayer, this act as it now stands relieves the railroads, utilities, and large corporations owning big tracts of Kentucky land from bearing a fair share of public expenses. The state's share of real estate taxes has never been much of a burden. It is the city and county levies and not the thirty cents on real property for state purposes that hurt.

Third, Senator Breathitt would levy a tax of 15 cents a gallon on all whisky manufactured in the state. Other states have levied much more. The whisky interests undoubtedly maintain a strong lobby at Frankfort. But they would not be likely to move elsewhere to avoid such a nominal tax.

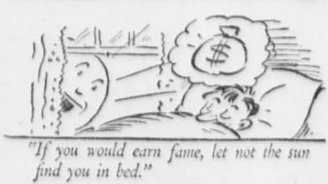

These three steps would solve Kentucky's immediate problem, permit the state to contribute its proportion to relief, enable the schools to continue a reasonably efficient operation, provide some sinking fund for outstanding warrants, and allow for some improvement in the condition of state penal and welfare institutions.

So stated, it seems very simple. But powerful forces are at work to prevent every one of the steps named above. Will the general assembly be able to rise to the occasion and overcome such opposition? For the sake of Kentucky and the future of the people of Kentucky, we hope so.—Ashland Independent.

MERCHANTS' RESOLUTIONS

Whereas, the regular session of the general assembly has adjourned without making provision to match federal funds for unemployment relief, or for the schools, or for many other essential governmental purposes; and

Whereas, a special session of the general assembly has been requested by it and it seems inevitable that such a session will be held; and

Whereas, the regular session just adjourned spent three fourths of the session before any working plan for raising revenue was brought forward, thereby resulting in the expiration of the time limit of the session before an adequate program could be enacted.

Therefore be it resolved by the citizens and merchants of eastern Kentucky in mass meeting assembled at Ashland, Kentucky, on Tuesday, April 3, 1934, as follows:

1. We favor a rigid economy in all the departments of government comparable to the drastic economies adopted under necessity by the taxpayers of Kentucky in all their expenditures.

2. We oppose a general sales tax, as unnecessary, uneconomic, and oppressive, alike upon the poor and the well to do, which will tend to retard recovery, to promote extravagance, and to increase the costs of government without any corresponding benefits. In this connection, we insist that members of the general assembly are honor bound to observe their pledges to the people who elected them to oppose a general sales tax in any guise, and no one has any moral right to release any senator or representative from the obligation of such pledge.

3. We favor diversion from the road funds for a brief period of a sum sufficient to produce $3,000,000 for unemployment relief to match three times that sum tendered by the federal relief administration during the next fiscal year.

4. We favor the levying of a tax of not less than fifteen cents per gallon on whisky manufactured, to produce approximately $3,000,000 for the benefit of the school fund and other governmental expenditures.

5. We favor a restoration of the state tax on real estate with a flat exemption of the first $5000 in value. We make these recommendations in the interest of the whole people and thru no self-serving motive, hereby pledging our unqualified support of sound policies of government and taxation and our entire willingness to shoulder our full share of the burdens of such a policy.

We commend these suggestions to the general assembly with the hope that attention may be given to constructive legislation in these difficult days, and we venture to hope that the law making bodies of the state may not be further delayed and diverted by trivial investigations aimed at the oppression and intimidation of citizens who have dared to exercise their constitutional rights to advocate and promote sound and economical governmental policies.

Thomas Jefferson

April 13 is the 191st anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson, the far-sighted political philosopher who founded the Democratic party, enunciated as his political creed those principles which are today being applied so successfully by another great Democratic statesman in an effort to restore prosperity and security to a prostrate nation.

Altho Jefferson was an aristocrat, of large wealth, his heart was attuned to the heart-throb of the common people. He had an abiding faith in their composite judgment. Special privilege, the exploitation of the huddled masses by those of political power, was to him repugnant. He was the first towering statesman on this continent who lifted his voice in behalf of the "man of no importance," championed the cause of those without influence.

On this the 191st anniversary of his birth the American people rejoice that there has been raised up by destiny in Franklin D. Roosevelt another great Democrat who is putting into practice the political tenets of the founder of the party. The efforts of this statesman of the "New Deal" to readjust the economic and social order so as to provide justice for the "forgotten man" is but a reapplication of the concepts of government first set forth by Jefferson.

In the 13 months that this disciple of Jefferson has been in the White House special privilege has been scourged from the capital of the country and the ideals of Jeffersonian justice have become regnant. The conditions today are vastly different from those when Jefferson laid down the fundamentals of good government, the political philosophy which he voiced more than a century ago has proved itself to be applicable in the present crisis in restoring a nation that for too long had departed from his concepts of government.

So it is fitting that on this natal day of Thomas Jefferson we pay tribute to his wisdom, acknowledge our obligation to this superb statesman to whom the American people shall ever be indebted. The dangers and abuses which follow when selfish interests are permitted to manipulate the government in disregard of the welfare of the average citizen have been proved to be a disastrous degree. Departure from the fundamental Jeffersonian teaching society.

Outlook Favorable

The outlook for farming is more favorable than in several years, says the annual outlook report of the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky.

The outlook for tobacco growers is considered much better than a year ago. The production adjustment program, promise tobacco growers an income in the present marketing season above that received in any recent year and a purchasing power higher than that of several years. Similarly favorable factors promise to prevail for the 1934 crop.

The good market that developed for spring lambs last year is expected to continue into the coming season. Prospects for demand for spring lambs are better than a year ago.

The outlook for hog raising is better than a year ago, partly because of the adjustments in hog production and partly because of prospective improved demand.

The beef cattle future is not so favorable. The market for finished cattle, however, is promising, and Kentucky men with cattle on feed should feel encouraged. Fewer cattle are now on feed.

Likewise, the dairy outlook is not considered favorable just at this time. Farmers who produce their own feed should make money from poultry this year. Owing to high cost of feed, the outlook is not so good for commercial poultry raisers.

The outlook for horses and mules continues good.

Feed prices are now relatively high in comparison with livestock prices and probably will continue high, at least until feeds from the 1934 crops are available.

Strawberry growers in Kentucky appear to have ahead of them this year keener competition from competing shipping areas, but also larger purchasing power among consumers.

In closing the report, Dr. H. B. Pries of the department of markets and rural finance says:

Although the outlook for agriculture is more promising than in several years, several new and important situations confront farmers. National agricultural adjustment programs will necessitate as never before that farmers give attention to economy rather than expansion of production. Rising prices with the attendant higher costs of labor, fertilizer, feed and the like, will emphasize the importance of maintaining only efficient animals and observing accepted cultural and marketing practices. Ample supplies of home-grown food and feed will be as important to profitable farming as in any recent year. Soil-resting and improving will be doubly significant with large acreages retired from production. Attention to quality of products will likely take on increasing importance with rising purchasing power of consumers. Finally, there is excellent prospect that good farm management practice will realize its customary reward in 1934.

One Thing I Do

The only effective way to achieve anything in legislation is to concentrate on one thing at a time. Especially is this policy necessary when opposition from politicians must be met. General programs are easily defeated, for it is easy for politicians to defeat one thing by attacking another in a general program.

The one plank program that must be forced to the front in every southern state now is the exemption of small homes from all taxation. The small home must be saved from the destructive attacks of political extravagance. If public funds are to be wasted in political extravagance, save the homes of the people from assessment to meet this waste.

There should be no sort of compromise in this fight. The only way to save the homes is to make them tax free, and the homes must be saved.

The strength of American civilization is not in our vast wealth, our factories, our transportation systems, our skyscrapers, or our banks. All of these are important, but none of them is of fundamental importance. They measure material achievement, conveniences and luxuries, but they do not, necessarily, measure that moral stamina in the citizen that is essential when a great crisis must be met.

It is no empty repetition of words, but incontrovertible fact supported by centuries of experience, that the strength of civilization is in the homes of its citizens. Hence, the first consideration in the study of every public policy should be its effect on the homes of the people. Anything that tends to destroy or injure the home is bad. Anything that tends to strengthen the home is worthy of support.

This is a day of signs and tags. On every hand signs may be seen telling you where to go and what to do. We are surfeited with signs, yet there is an urgent demand for one more. Our legislatures should be required at the earliest time possible to present every owner of a small home a sign of independence to be hung over the entrance of the home. On this sign will be written by authority of law: "No tax gatherers allowed here. A man's home is his castle."—Southern Agriculturist.

ANTI-SOCIAL TENDENCIES

Senator Copeland of New York, in a recent address, asked the cooperation of public school teachers in a war against crime. He thought that every child should be placed under expert observation, and those who show "antisocial" tendencies should have immediate attention.

What constitutes an "antisocial" tendency? An antisocial person is one who refuses to recognize his obligation to the community, and who constantly violates the rules of conduct which the community makes.

The boy who is always cheating at games is showing antisocial tendencies. The girl who tells lies encourages her mates to disobey school rules. If her example is followed, it will be impossible to maintain discipline in such a school.

We can't work and do business successfully if a considerable part of our people thus refuse to obey the rules of life. It is more important to secure an influence over such children, and convince them that their antisocial acts injure themselves, than it is to teach them studies like arithmetic and grammar.

WHAT HAVE WE DONE TODAY?

We shall do much in the years to come, But what have we done today? We shall give our gold in a princely sum.

But what did we give today? We shall lift the heart and dry the tear.

We shall plant a smile in place of fear, We shall speak the words of love and cheer.

But what did we speak today? We shall be so kind in the after while, But what have we been today? We shall bring to each lonely life a smile.

But what have we brought today? We shall give to truth a grander birth, And to steadfast faith a deeper worth, We shall feed the hungry souls of earth.

But whom have we fed today? We shall reap such joys in the by and by.

But what have we sown today? We shall build us mansions in the sky, But what have we built today? 'Tis sweet in idle dreams to bask, But here and now we do our task; Yes, this is the thing our souls must ask—

What have I done today?—Selected.

The Farm and Home

Homemakers who have not already procured them should either buy or make first aid kits for simple treatments or for use while awaiting the doctor's arrival. Among things needed are sterile bandages, a disinfectant such as iodine to prevent infection of skin abrasions, adhesive tape and sterile gauze, sterile acid saline, zinc oxide, or unguentine. A chart showing antidotes to poisons should be kept handy.

It does not pay to wear old, run-over shoes around the house, as the cost in pain and lowered efficiency is too great to permit real profit. Shapeless shoes may cause backache, nervousness, and tired feet. If shoes are otherwise good, have them re-heeled and straightened.

Relief gardens and dairies are being planned in many Kentucky counties. In the gardening, remember to plant a variety of products for storage. Dairy profits may be increased by cutting down on the number of cows, by careful breeding, and feeding to improve quality.

In buying tobacco seed, only the best quality of seed tested for Kentucky soil and climate should be used. Special care should be taken to avoid diseases which have caused losses before. Experiment Station Root-Rot Resistant Burley No. 5 has been proved successful.

Machinery should be overhauled for defects before spring work is started. Weak or broken parts which were overlooked in the fall check-up should be repaired now, as both time and money would be lost if they should break during the work season.

Make sure the brooder supplies ample heat. Chicks need a temperature between 90 to 100 degrees the first few days. If it is too warm close around the brooder the chicks will move away and find a more comfortable temperature. If it is too cold they will pile up close to the brooder. It is hard to save a chilled chick.

About the Home

Spring is a good time to make plantings around the home. Plan before planting, suggests N. R. Elliott, extension landscape specialist for the college of agriculture, university of Kentucky.

The plan need not be elaborate; a sketch or outline will do.

Study the plants to be grown. How tall will they grow? How much space will they require? Do they need shade or sunshine? What are their soil requirements? When do the bloom and what is the color?

A comparatively few plants carefully selected and correctly located will usually produce the desired effects.

One fault of planting without a plan is a scattered, spotted effect. This is the result of the home owner giving

FORD TO BUILD HUGE EXPOSITION AT THE 1934 CHICAGO WORLD'S FAIR

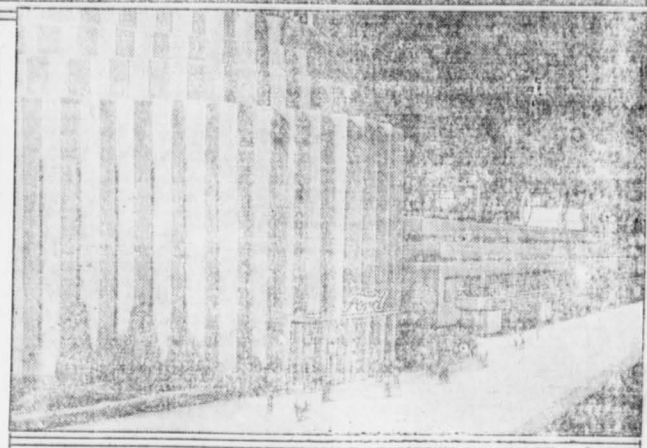

A GREAT Ford Exposition, portraying the tremendous part the arts, sciences and virtually every other industry plays in the manufacture of today's motor cars, is planned by the Ford Motor Company for the 1934 World's Fair.

The Ford Exposition will be housed in a giant building 860 feet long to be built in the heart of the fair grounds on an 11-acre plot bordering Lake Michigan and flanking the main fair boulevard. Construction of the building will start Mar. 1.

In the dominant central building will be housed Henry Ford's "Drama of Transportation," depicting the development of wheeled vehicles from the chariots of ancient Egypt to modern motor cars. Every model of Ford car made since 1903 will be included.

In the smaller building to the left will be housed some of the priceless historic exhibits from the Edison Institute at Dearborn, Mich., including the one-story brick workshop, complete with the original tools, where Mr. Ford in 1893 built with his own hands his first motor car. This first car will be displayed inside the shop.

The main exposition building will

Henry Ford and Edsel B. Ford show to Rufus C. Dawes (center), president of the World's Fair, the scale model of the giant Ford Exposition building to be built at the 1934 Fair. (Lower) The Ford building as it will be seen from Leif Erikson drive. Opposite the building will be a huge park bordering Lake Michigan.

display an imposing array of exhibits, most of them in action, show how steel, aluminum and other metals, soy beans, corn, wool, cotton and other farm products and the products of myriad industries are converted into car parts. The building also will house displays of cars and a big movie theater. Along the east side will be an open-air balcony equipped with chairs and lounges where hundreds may relax. Across the drive fronting the lake will be a big Ford Park, beautifully landscaped and also fitted with seats and other comforts for fair crowds.

"CHINA MAN" IS OF NEANDERTHAL RACE

The skull and brain of Sinanthropus, the so-called "China man," are probably those of a somewhat variant member of the widespread Neanderthal race, according to the independent conclusions of Prof. Eugene Dubois of Holland, discoverer of the celebrated Pithecanthropus remains in Java, and Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, curator of physical anthropology of the Smithsonian Institution.

Discovery of the Sinanthropus remains near Peking a few years ago has been widely heralded as that of a new and exceedingly primitive species of the human race, comparable in age and evolutionary status with the Pithecanthropus itself. But after a study of expertly made skull and brain casts from the original specimens, both anthropologists are convinced that the position of the apelike Java man as the earliest known specimen of the human race remains undisturbed.

As a Neanderthal, member of a race which was widespread in Europe and probably in Asia during the so-called Mousterian period before the development of Homo sapiens, the China man remains a highly significant and valuable addition to the stock of skeletal remains of early man, Doctor Hrdlicka says.

The skull characteristics of the Sinanthropus, according to Doctor Hrdlicka, are essentially Neanderthaloid; the brain cast shows that this organ, while small, was "thoroughly human." It could almost be matched today, Doctor Hrdlicka says, with some normal human brains of primitive peoples in various parts of the earth. Literary Digest.

Hints for Homemakers

By Jane Rogers

AN old sewing machine can easily be converted into a smart dressing table. Saw a piece of pressed wood, obtainable from a lumber dealer, to the right size. Nail it to a frame made of 3/4-inch square wood, and cover the entire top with a colorful chintz or other heavy material, taking care to tack it tightly around the edges. Then give it a coat of shellac and you have a serviceable table top. A ruffled skirt should be made of the same material and tacked to the frame. If you wish to use the machine, simply lift off the top and skirt.

Serving a fruit garnish or compote with the meat course adds a pleasing touch to the dinner. It is not only delicious in itself but provides a pungent contrasting flavor to heavier dishes. Another all-important point for the busy housewife is that such garnishes and compotes are easily and quickly prepared.

Cherries Are Ripe

CHERRIES are cheery not only because of their bright color, but they bring cheer to the stomach as well with their nice, tart, individual tang. So, without more ado, here are some recipes for cheery cherries which will make you cheery.

Cherry Tarts: Line scalloped tartlets with pastry. Drain the red pitted cherries from a No. 2 can and cook the juice and two-thirds cup sugar to a thick syrup, add the cherries and cook until glazed. Drain again and cool cherries, then divide between tart shells. Mix one-half teaspoon cornstarch and one teaspoon cold water, add to syrup and cook until thick. Pour over cherries and bake in a hot oven from fifteen to twenty minutes. Remove to plates with small lace-paper doilies. Garnish tops with whipped cream rosettes.

Cheery and Cheap

And here's a cherry pie that's both cheery and cheap since it costs not more than thirty-five cents and serves six:

Cherry Pie: Drain the sour cherries from a No. 2 can, and pour into a pie tin lined with pastry. Mix three tablespoons flour, one-half cup sugar and one-half cup of the cherry syrup, and pour over. Dot with butter. (You will need one tablespoon of it). Cover with narrow strips of pastry, and bake in a hot oven—425 degrees—for twenty-five minutes.

HOW

AUTHOR OF "UNCLE TOM'S CABIN" WAS ESTEEMED
Harriet Beecher Stowe, who was chosen recently as one of the twelve most distinguished American women of the last century, rose to prominence by writing a book about an apt subject at an auspicious time. "Uncle Tom's Cabin," the volume which made her famous, was published during an era in which the subject of slavery aroused not only interest but hysteria.

Her story of the sorrows of the southern negroes, told in a simple sympathetic vein, exerted a tremendous influence upon the molding of popular thought. On the one hand it aroused the abolitionists to a feverish emotion and converted many lukewarm northerners to the beliefs of the anti-slavery faction, while on the other hand it served to crystallize the resentment of southerners against those who sought to interfere with their institutions.

So she turned her literary ability to the composition of "Uncle Tom's Cabin." It appeared first in serial form in the National Era, a Washington publication, between June, 1851, and April, 1852, attracting so little notice that Mrs. Stowe said: "It seemed that there was no hope; that nobody would hear; that nobody would read; that nobody would pity."

Then the story was published in book form later in 1852 and immediately became a sensation. During the five years which followed nearly 50,000 copies were sold. The book has been translated into at least 18 languages.

How Truffles Are Grown:

Where They Thrive Best

Truffles range from the size of a filbert to that of a potato. Although white truffles are somewhat in demand, it is the black or queen truffles of England and France which are in most demand, those of Perigord being considered the finest. These are of varying size, and have a gray or seal-brown or nearly black skin, which is pebbled, or warty, with small angular protuberances. The firm interior, with such a texture as has an immature puff-ball, is dark brown, somewhat mottled by reason of its chambered structure, and reticulated with the white film of hyphae.

Truffles are practically never cultivated in spite of various attempts. They thrive best in limestone soils, and in such light, moist, but well-drained woodlands as are frequented by the various species of trees near which the truffles prefer to exist—possibly on their decaying roots. The tubers are entirely subterranean, occurring either deep in the ground or close to the surface, ripen in winter and are dug out, either laboriously by unaided man with a sharp spud or by the aid of dogs and pigs.

How "Nickel Plate" Got Name

An Ohio newspaper editor is credited with coining the phrase. In its issue of April 14, 1881, the Norwalk Chronicle in speaking of the road, its glittering prospects, the brilliant possibilities of trade opened up for the cities through which it operated, together with the gilt-edged character of its financial backing, characterized the institution as the "nickel-plated" road, the term being intended as expressive of the bright and substantial attributes of the enterprise. This is believed to be the first use of the term as applied to the road, which from that time on was frequently used in the same connection in various newspapers until, in abbreviated form, as the Nickel Plate, it has become the accepted and popular sobriquet of the trunk line.

How to Cut Bottle Neck

To cut the neck or bottom from a bottle, secure a piece of wire 1-8 to 3-16 inch in diameter and bend it to conform to the curvature of the bottle so that it extends over one-half the circumference. Scratch the bottle with a file and heat the wire to a low red or black heat. Place it under the scratch and slowly rotate the bottle through a partial revolution, alternately toward the right and left until the glass cracks along the line of the wire, then continue the rotary motion, but more in one direction than the other until the crack makes a complete circuit.

How Many Colors Rainbow Has

"How many colors has a rainbow, and what are they?" asks D. J. S. Rainbows contain all the colors of the spectrum—red, orange, yellow, green, indigo blue, and violet are the visible colors, but there are also infra-red and ultra-violet portions which are not visible to the naked eye. You can study this phenomenon if you can procure a prism—one of the cut-glass pendants from an old-fashioned chandelier will do. Hold this so that a ray of light strikes it, and you will see all the visible colors of the spectrum—and of the rainbow.

How to Mark on Steel

A satisfactory way of marking steel tools is to warm the metal so that a thin coating of wax can be applied, and scratch through this wax with a sharp-pointed tool to give the letters or figures desired; then apply nitric acid of about 1.20 specific gravity to the marking on the wax. This can readily be done by moistening a strip of blotting paper in the acid and laying it over the figures to be etched.
